these complicated movements is that Venus seems to move in straight lines east and west of the sun and to follow closely in his steps. As Venus appears to terrestrial observers, so the earth appears to Martian observers, oscillating east and west in the same way, and sometimes like Venus and Mercury, making a transit over the sun's

Venus will be the loveliest star in the heavens through the month of May, as heavens through the month of May, as after elongation she turns her steps westward, moving rapidly towards us, and hastening on to her period of greatest brilliancy. She will form a delightful planetary study for the naked eye, and also for telescopic observation. Seen through the telescope, at elongation or a few days after, she takes on the aspect of the moon at her last quarter, half her disc the moon at her last quarter, half her disc being illumined. Then, like the moon, she becomes a waning crescent, less and less of her enlightened surface being turned towards, but increasing in size as she approaches us, more than enough to counterbalance the lessened light. At the end of the month she has nearly reached her culminating point, while her high northern declination adds to the length of her stay
